Just sharing a few pictures of an old Citizen 8200 diver I scored on the Bay. I believe its circa 1981. It looked pretty normal from the pictures that the seller provided but I quickly fell in love with this piece the moment it got out of of the postal package. It measures 41mm across without crown, 44mm with crown and 50mm lug to lug.

Citizen or Miyota 8200 is among the most successful automatic watch movements. The 21 jewel 8200 automatic movement (21,600 bph) was first produced around 1975, and by the end of the 1970's it had become Citizen's standard automatic movement till the ...

The vast majority of watches sold today are analog quartz. Mechanical movements, on the other hand, are more expensive and time-consuming to produce, but are valued for their craftsmanship, artistry and beauty. Mechanical watches, and especially automatic watches, are sometimes handed down for generations as heirlooms.

I have been looking for an example of the 8200, and to keep within my collection parameters (i.e. pre-1980), an Adorex from 1977 fits the bill: The 8200 is a much more mundane movement than the 8000 - running at 21,600 beats per hour there is no fine adjuster and no "hacking", although as with most Citizen automatics, it can be hand wound.

[Setting The Time] (1) Pull out crown to position 1 and turn to set hands to correct time. For calendar-equipped watches, do not confuse AM and PM settings. (2) When crown is returned ...

The 8200 movement is a robust one, stable and quite. It has high accuracy compared to other entry-level automatic mechanisms. What you get for the money is the "Citizen" version of the inarguably beautiful, Seiko 5. The Citizen Eagle 7 still stands a challenge to the Seiko 5 - for the substantial feel it brings on the wrist, for the more traditional hands that are ...
