So I've been talking to a guy who is shipping a pachislo machine that I've been wanting for awhile. Thing is...with all the machines I've ever bought, they have been already sold by a guy in USA. I'm not 100% familiar with transformers or the different voltage that USA's appliances use over Japanese appliances. All I've ever been told is that if I get a pachislo from ...

switch or a toggle switch. Power the machine off and either turn the key switch or toggle to the ON position. Turn the machine on. A number from 1-6 will be shown on the credit meter (or display on the back of the front door of the machine, depending on manufacturer). Use the reset button on the power supply or on the back of Getting started with Pachislo machines. All Pachislo machines basically operate the same way and have the same features so you will not find any difficulty in getting started. First to power on or turn on the machine you need to plug your machine into a standard outlet. Then place your key into door lock, turn to the right to open door.

Many times people can not find the volume control switches inside a machine or are wondering what a switch does. If you own a machine and want to share then this is the place to post your pictures of the insides of machines. Any request or chatter in this topic will be deleted.
